Educating for an Unpredictable World:
Challenges for international education

25 years since the inaugural AIE conference, the world seems increasingly unpredictable. The 2027 AIE conference focuses on the challenges of supporting students as they approach adult lives in a context not only of major advances in science and technology, but also of concerns relating to issues including the changing nature of our environment, and geopolitical conflict and uncertainty worldwide.

Call for Proposals

To submit a proposal, please upload to the conference website an abstract of the proposed presentation (approximately 300 words), together with the name(s) and full contact details of the conference presenter(s). Each presentation will last for around 20 minutes, followed by a 25 minute discussion. Proposals for presentations should relate to the overall conference theme (Educating for an Unpredictable World: Challenges for international education) and, more specifically, to one of the topic areas (see below).

The conference strand structure will be developed on the basis of accepted proposals. Proposals for presentations may be based on completed research or other projects, on classroom or whole school/institution experience, or on ideas for innovative schemes or topics for future exploration.

Proposals will be welcomed from those with interests and experience across the age range from early years to university level, and from those with responsibility for leading change in systems of schools/colleges, as well as those with experience of leading individual institutions.

In relating to one of the topic areas, presentations will be expected to draw on issues relevant to the area in our rapidly changing world.

Conference fee: GBP 550 (early bird: by 30 April 2027, GBP 500)

Deadline for proposals : 30 April 2027

Proposals for strand presentations should relate to the overall conference theme and to one of the following topics areas:
